Dominick Kelly, wealthy contractor, arranges with Junius Van Wyck, possessor of a proud name but no money for the former's son, Brian Kelly, to wed Janet Van Wyck. Brian refuses to become a part to the arrangement and in a quarrel with his father, is ordered from the house. His aunt, Honora Kelly intercedes in vain for him. Brian thrown upon his own resources is made a traffic cop by the Police Commissioner. Janet, determined to wed Brian, works upon his sympathies to such an extent that to save her humiliation, he consents to become engaged to her. He is at liberty to break off the engagement whenever he desires it.

In Poland, Count Florian Zuleski heads a committee that is working for perpetual peace among European nations. He and his confreres have gathered diplomatic secrets, the publication of which would rouse every great nation against those which desire to make trouble. He plans to send these to New York, where a representative, Kosciusko will place the documents in a safe place. Among the councillors is Baron Von Rittenheim, a traitor, who plans to obtain the documents and also get control of the treasure which is possible from the possession of the papers. With death approaching, Count Florian is forced to select his daughter, the Countess Marya to act as messenger. He sends her to America with an old family retainer, Wenceslaus, with instructions to go to the home of the peasant Franciszka, a former servant of the Count -- and there await an advertisement from Kosciusko, Rittenheim, his lieutenant Hund and others arrive after Florian has passed away. Rittenheim and Hund follow Marya to America.

Franciszka runs a beauty parlor in New York and forces Marya to work for her board. Marya and Wenceslaus watch the papers and one day get lost in Central Park. Here Brian, in plain clothes, befriends them. Brian, as a traffic cop, gives a summons to his father's chauffeur while Dominick is riding in the car.

Hund, endeavors to have Wenceslaus arrested on a false charge of pickpocketing, but Brian prevents the arrest. Marya is lured to the apartment of a Mr. Siddons, but she stabs him - wounding him slightly - and is given refuge in Brian's boarding house. Rittenheim runs down Wenceslaus in a taxi and the old man is taken to Bellevue Hospital.

Brian and Marya are secretly married. Aunt Honora and Janet call upon Marya to learn something about her, and Marya is hurt by the announcement that Brian and Janet are betrothed. Brian, on his return, comforts her with his explanations. They receive word that Wenceslaus has recovered consciousness at the hospital. Brian has to report for duty at the station house, so Marya takes Colette, the landlady's lame daughter. Before leaving the house she reads the advertisement that Kosciusko is waiting for the documents. Marya takes them with her. Wenceslaus dies, giving Marya the Zuleski jewels as a dowry. As the two girls leave the hospital, Marya sees Hund. She gives the papers to Colette to deliver, and permits Hund to kidnap her. Colette delivers the papers and informs Kosciusko that Marya has been kidnapped. He calls up Aunt Honora who in turn notifies Dominick, who starts an immediate police investigation.

In a deserted house in the slums, Rittenheim and Hund try to make Marya tell where the papers are. She refuses despite their rough treatment. She manages to take the telephone receiver from the hood, so that her screams are heard in the telephone exchange. The operator notifies the police, and Brian is sent to Marya's aid. He arrives in time to prevent worse suffering and indignities upon Marya, and Dominick brings reinforcements. Rittenheim and Hund are taken into custody.

Dominick and Brian forgive each other and the young couple are congratulated when their secret marriage becomes no longer a secret. There is the start of a romance between Dominick and Janet. The end.
